

Read & Explore the article from COMRADE Gallery about Soviet and American Cold War propaganda posters:

1. What emotions do the Soviet and American posters try to make people feel?
Give at least two examples from the posters you viewed.

The posters of the Soviets and Americans tried to make people feel different things at the same time. American posters made the Soviet Union look dangerous while the Soviet posters made America look unfair and not good. And both posters used colors and strong words to make it believable.

2. How did the United States and the Soviet Union portray each other during the Cold War?
Explain how propaganda was used to create fear, pride, or distrust.

The U.S. and Soviet Union showed each other as enemies. They used propaganda to make people feel fear and too support their side and not like the other side so the people would support one side and not the other.

3. Which poster do you think was the most effective or persuasive?
Describe the images, symbols, colors, or words that made it powerful.

I think the American anti-communism poster was the most powerful because the dark colors and strong words made it feel serious and scary but the details on the posters looked real.

4. What similarities and differences do you notice between Soviet and American propaganda posters?
Think about themes like patriotism, military strength, freedom, or peace.

Both posters showed patriotism and strength. While American posters talked more about freedom the Soviet posters focused more on unity and workers so both of the posters and sides showed different things because both wanted different things.

5. Do you think propaganda still exists today?

Compare Cold War propaganda to modern examples from social media, politics, advertisements, or news. Explain your reasoning.

I believe that it does still exist today the reason why is because to this day presidents use a lot of information or posts trying to talk about the good that they would do like presidents or politicians but never really know what they really want because they just use their words and posts that looks like nothings wrong with it.
